

Gnocchi-Festival

Gnocchi and the Verona Carnival

For hundreds of years, Carnival Friday in Verona has been celebrated with food and drink. This tradition is widely believed to date back to a famine which occurred in the 15th century. When Verona came under the authority of the Venetian government, the new subjects were given free victuals to encourage their support. This tradition was continued up until the end of the 18th century, at the cost of the state. Even today, a «papà del gnocco» or «gnocchi father» is chosen on the occasion of the festival, and a large number of housewives from one of Verona's town quarters prepare mountains of gnocchi. Punctually at 12 noon on the Friday, these are then cooked in huge pots, and served garnished with parmesan and hot butter.
